An Army Officer's Admirable Collection to Be Exhibited.

PURTRAITS OF SOCIETY.

Advance.

There is the largest Spanish flag that the siand ever had, and a Porto Rican mandoin, which the Smithsonian Institution covets. It is caryed with pictures of Spanish theory, they represent scenes and persons of Porto Rico that may never be accessible to others.

He had a frieycle that carried him, an attendant and his photographic apparatus. He had a squad of soldiers under his orders against the bandits. He was recommended to the homes of the most exclusive society in the island.

His work had the personal, intense interest of the lare Gen. Henry. It was done with good, artistle appreciation. The photographer obtained views along the military road from Ponce to San Juan, pictures of churches, municipal buildings, streets, parks, statues, homes, plantations, gardens, landscapes, persons in official and fashionable authority.

As Americans Found Them.

The exhibition is to show the Porto Rican children as Americans found them, as they are dressed now in the public schools, under the flags that the Lafayette Post, G. A. R., gave: the native shacks where officers of the army live, the public festivals, the private reunions in the palaces, the coffee plantations and their machinery, the flowers and the tall cactl in the gardens. There are the Coamo baths that were found by Ponce de Leon, tradition says, and on the soft clay walks of which pilgrims have written their names and expressions of gratefulness for cures in the ages. There is the oldest church of the new world's discoverers, built in 1511. There is the Dominican monastery that was founded in 1661.

A modern home in Guayanilla, an old one at Mayaguez, statues that came from Italy two hundred years ago, bandlis captured by American soldiers, young native women. American officers' wives at their colonial duties, are in the collection in amazing life-like expression.

Women Stay Indoors.

In Porto Rico women seldom went out of doors. Their chapels were in their homes. Their teachers were preceptors at the color of the purposes of a Percoil's Bayreuth, and the composer's unfaished oratorio, "The Massacre of the Innocents' will be brought out there, this Winter.

The little girl, twelve years of age, who rode on a pony for thirty miles alone in search of a physician is in the exhibition. Her mother was ill and her father, an army engineer, was at his service elsewhere. The young man whose mother and wife arrived at Porto Rico to see him on the day when he was ordered to Manila is in the exhibition also.

There are the most intelligent, the most valuable, the most fascinating persons of the Island. There are the indifferent, the commonplace, the lowly and the reprehensible. There are also the invading men and women of the United States—officers, simple soldlers, nurses, teachers. No question that one may ask of Porto Rico's men, women, manners, remains unanswered there.
